L'unicità della Commissione Europea

202 istituzioni che applicano behavioural insights alle politiche pubbliche (a livello locale, nazionale o internazionale).

La Commissione Europea:

- Aree di competenza
- Strumenti di policy
- Ridotta vicinanza al cittadino

Centro Comune di Ricerca (Joint Research Centre)

Il Centro comune di ricerca è il servizio scientifico interno della Commissione.

Fornisce un supporto al processo decisionale dell'UE mediante consulenze scientifiche indipendenti e basate su prove concrete.

La sede centrale è a Bruxelles.
I siti scientifici si trovano in 5 Paesi membri:
Belgio (Geel)
Germania (Karlsruhe)
Olanda (Petten)
Spagna (Siviglia)
e
Italia (Ispra)

Obiettivi e attività del CCBI

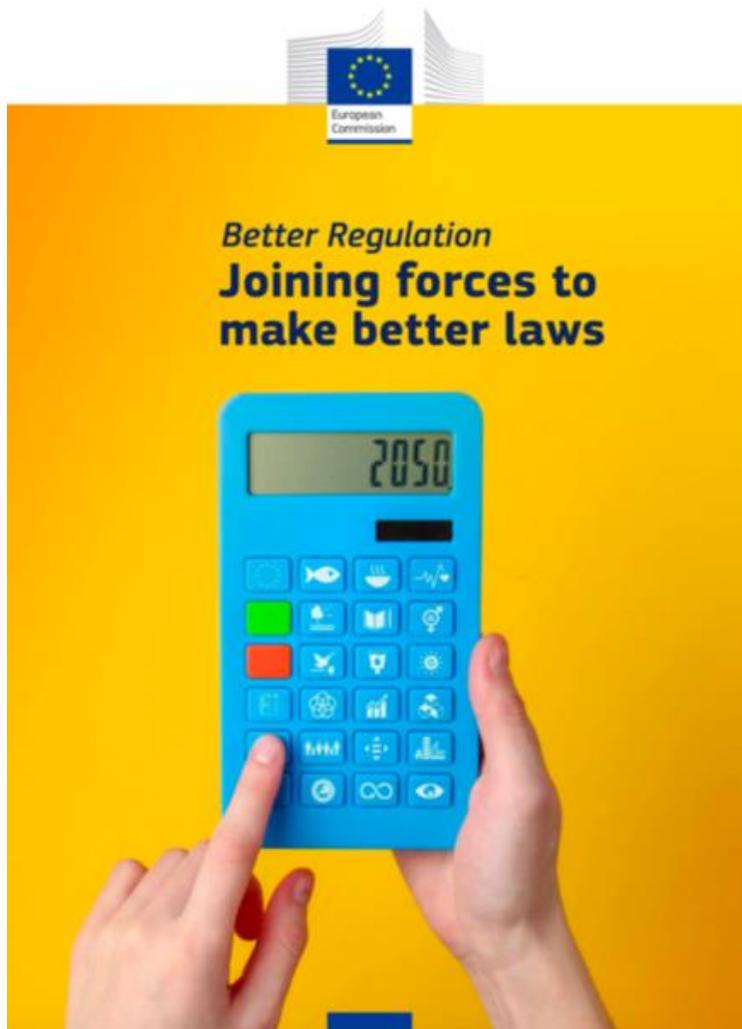

Obiettivi:

- Garantire buone pratiche nell'applicazione dei BI all'interno della EC.

Attività:

- condurre ricerche comportamentali (revisioni della letteratura, ricerche qualitative, sondaggi, esperimenti di laboratorio e online, RCT)
- gestire e dare un senso alle conoscenze comportamentali per la politica dell'UE (policy brief, relazioni tecniche...)
- sensibilizzare e sviluppare capacità relative ai BI per informare il processo decisionale dell'UE (NET-Bic, programma di formazione interna, seminari e conferenze...)
- monitorare l'applicazione di BI alle policy ed esplorare le future esigenze di policy

Legiferare meglio

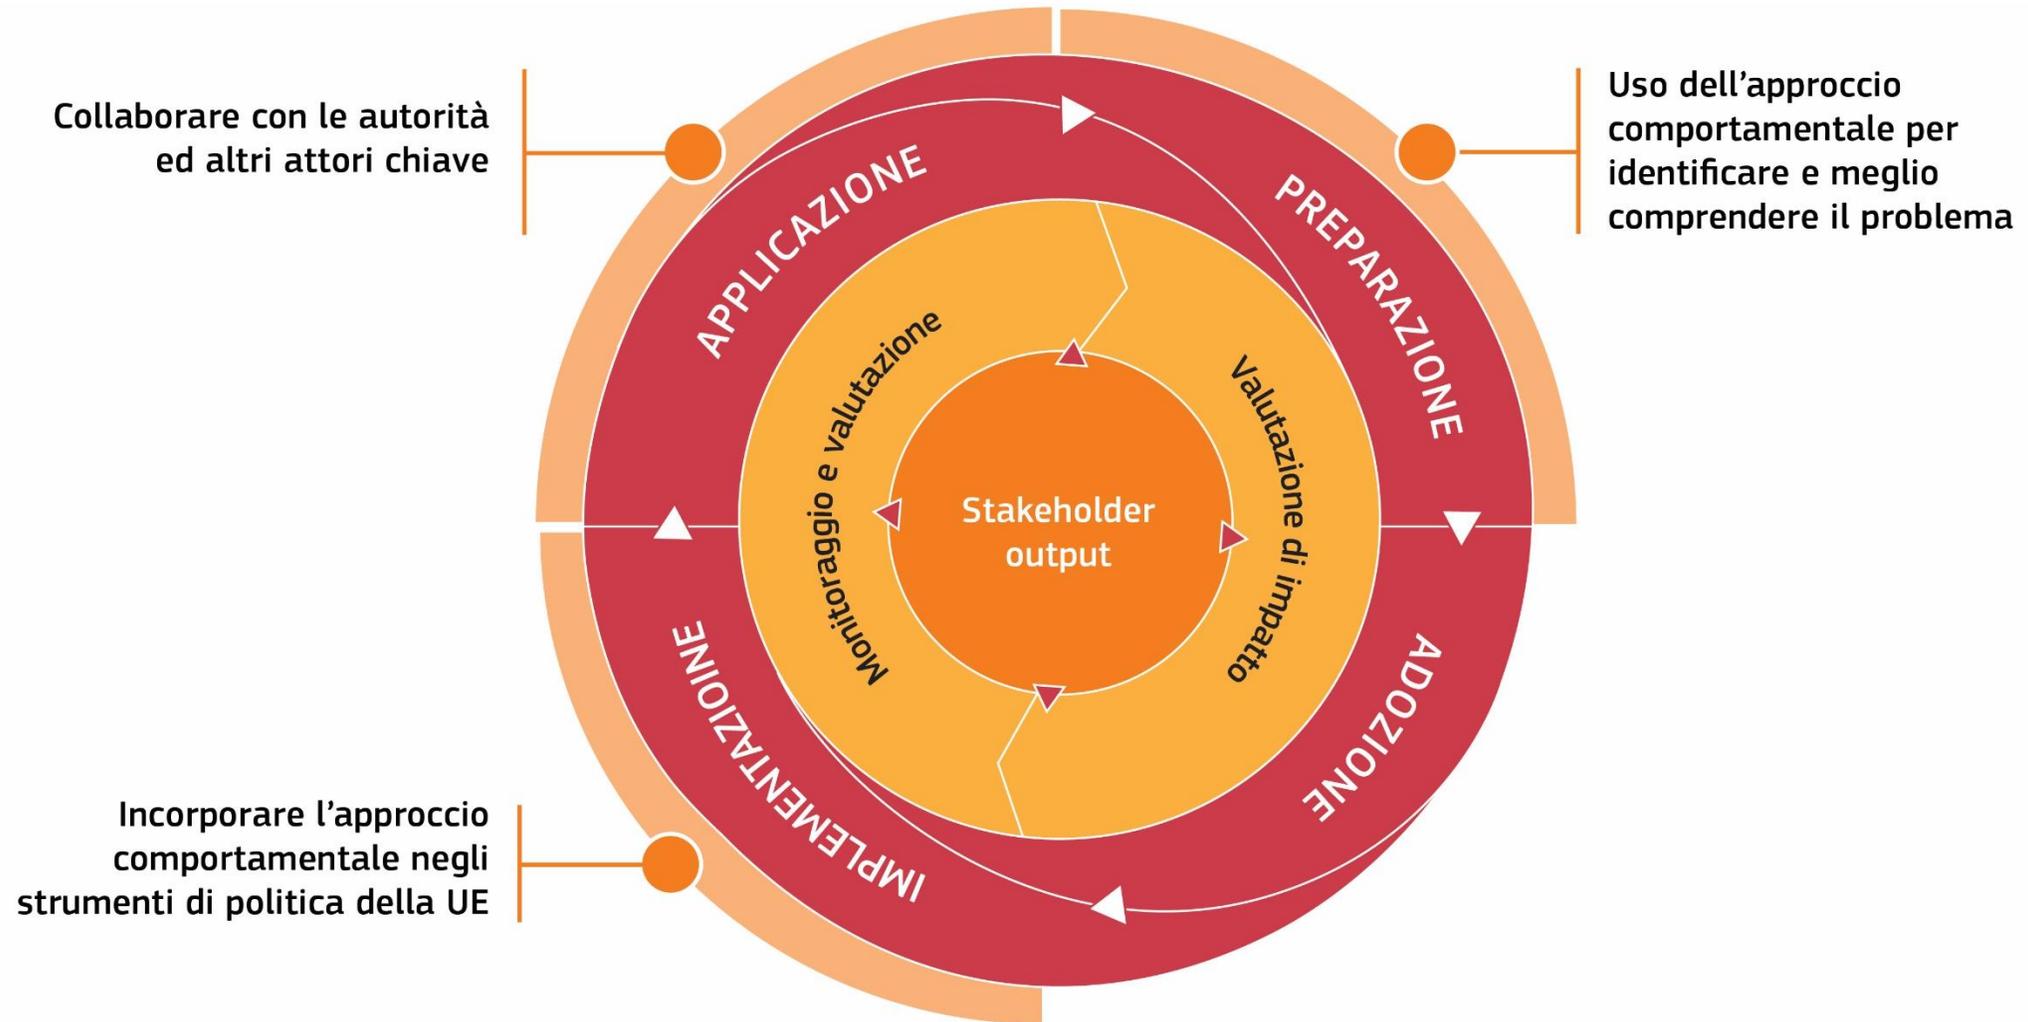

- Fondare le azioni dell'UE su elementi concreti
- Semplificare e migliorare la legislazione dell'UE
- Coinvolgere i cittadini, le imprese e le parti interessate nel processo decisionale

- Better Regulation portal

- Communication on Better regulation available here

Conclusione

In sintesi

L'applicazione dei BI alla EC è una circostanza unica.

27 stati membri - 445 milioni di cittadini

Siamo ora in una "fase di consolidamento" in cui è necessario:

- ampliare l'ambito di lavoro, condurre ricerche più esplorative e interne,
- collaborare con gli stati membri, il settore privato e il mondo accademico,
- passare da un approccio centralizzato a uno misto.

(handbook available here)

Key takeaways:

- Designing policies with the assumption that human behaviour is rational can lead to suboptimal results. Far better is to resort to a more nuanced understanding of behaviour, based on empirical evidence of how people actually behave.
- Behavioural insights can be applied throughout the policy cycle. They can help define a policy problem by identifying underlying causes of relevant behaviours, and
- Arriving at specific, relevant behavioural insights may require original empirical work. First, the research question will need to be defined tightly, followed by the choice of methodology (often randomised controlled trials (RCTs), experiments or qualitative research).
- Ultimately, behavioural insights are another tool for empirically based policymaking, complementary to existing tools. But they are also unique in that they can shed light on how decisions are taken in policymaking.

What we do

We support policy making with evidence on human behaviour by

- conducting behavioural research
- managing and making sense of behavioural knowledge for EU policy
- raising awareness and building capacity on behavioural insights, to inform EU policymaking
- monitoring how behavioural insights are applied to policy now, and exploring future options for this
